After drawing round positions of the body in a doorway I coloured the image to show the dynamic, circular shapes that emerged.

This 3D representation of the drawing was made using small record cards. This was then used to create the image below.

The images above and below are copies of the 3D paper model but made from different materials such as wood, cans, and string, hence involving new construction methods. The model was also required to house a walnut so a space developed for this in the centre where the structure is denser and most stable.
